

Pendal Monthly Commentary

Pendal Australian Specialised Retirement Income Portfolio

November 2020

Market commentary

The S&P/ASX 300 posted its best month since 1988 in November – a gain of 10.2%.

Good news on the vaccine front – coupled with the prospect of a more predictable policy environment and a reasonable earnings season in the US – drove improvement in sentiment.

Investors seemed content to look through the latest Covid surge in the northern hemisphere and the risk of further lockdowns.

Resources (+10.7%) rebounded strongly for the month and marginally outperformed Industrials (+10.1%) as confidence in the economic recovery continued to drive commodity price gains.

Copper was up 11.7% and is well above pre-Covid levels. Brent Crude gained 29% for the month. Gold fell 4.9% as investors saw reduced need for portfolio insurance.

There was something of a catch-up trade in November – stocks and sectors that have generally lagged this year did well.

Energy (+28.2%) was the best-performing sector, driven by a rebound in the oil price.

Financials (+16.1%) were also strong. Updates from the major banks suggested bad and doubtful debts were tracking towards the more benign end of expectations, leaving capital in a strong position. Margins remain under pressure from low rates and strong competition, but all in all the updates were well received.

The more defensive sectors generally underperformed.

Consumer staples (-0.66%) was the only sector to go backwards, experiencing the twin impacts of a rotation away from defensives and a hit to Treasury Wines (TWE, -6.3%) as China imposed tariffs on Australian wine.

Utilities (+1.5%) and Health Care (+2.9%) lagged the market.

Technology growth stocks were generally muted.

The sector rose 4.1% but the portfolio's preferred position, Xero (XRO), was up 20.3% following a good result.

Subscriber growth in Xero's more mature markets of Australia and New Zealand suggest a post-Covid shift in mentality towards the importance of cloud-based administration for businesses.

Stock specific drivers of monthly performance relative to benchmark

Three largest contributors

Overweight Qantas (QAN, +28.4%)

An easing of restrictions on interstate travel opened the way for QAN to start ramping up its domestic operations. While QAN has now returned close to its pre-Covid enterprise value, we see the opportunity for further upside with a material beneficial effect on working capital as operations normalise.

Overweight Santos (STO, +30.2%)

The surging oil price proved a strong tailwind for energy producers, including STO – our preferred holding in the space. STO has done a strong job of managing costs over the last few years and through the Covid period. It also has the most attractive portfolio of potential growth opportunities.

Underweight Woolworths (WOW, -3.1%)

Defensive consumer staples companies underperformed, including Woolworths and our preferred position in Metcash (MTS, +0.0%), as investor sentiment improved. We continue to see upside in MTS. Its supermarket is on an improving trajectory after several years of self-help, while its hardware and liquor segments continue to perform well.

Three largest detractors:

Overweight Evolution Mining (EVN, -10.3%)

The gold price sold off as sentiment improved – along with gold miners such as EVN. We still see an important place for gold exposure in the portfolio. It is a hedge against a downturn in sentiment – particularly with the Covid surge in the US and Europe. It could also perform well if we see an environment of negative real interest rates as inflation expectations increase but nominal rate remain low.

Overweight Metcash (MTS, +0.0%)

Defensive consumer staples companies underperformed, including Woolworths and our preferred position in Metcash (MTS, +0.0%), as investor sentiment improved. We continue to see upside in MTS. Its supermarket is on an improving trajectory as a result of several years of self-help, while its hardware and liquor segments continue to perform well.

Underweight National Australia Bank (NAB, +24.8%)

The portfolio is underweight the Big Four banks. The sector is tracking towards a better outcome than many feared. But we are mindful that challenges remain – in particular a headwind of low rates and pressure on margins as well as limited ability to reduce costs.

Market outlook

The S&P/ASX 300 gained 10.23% in November – its best monthly return since March 1988. It was also a good month for the portfolio, which outperformed.

While improved sentiment toward US politics and vaccines drove markets, the move was supercharged by two surprises.

First, contrary to consensus expectations, there was no “Blue Wave” of change in US politics. The presidential race was very close and the Senate looks set to remain in Republican hands. This would leave the US with a far more moderate – and market-friendly – government than many expected. That said, we continue to watch the lead up to the Georgia Senate run-off with interest.

Second, on the vaccine front efficacy rates of around 95% reported by Modern and Pfizer were far higher than most expected.

These positive surprises – along with several negative ones which occurred in 2020 – emphasise the importance we place on building a robust portfolio. This has been the bedrock of the portfolio’s performance this year.

Our approach is to have been to keep different types of stocks in the portfolio – positions that could perform under a number of different scenarios. We then use our insight into companies to choose the best stocks to own. These were the companies where we saw relatively limited downside and potential for large upside gains.

Our performance in the market’s plunge was driven by defensive holdings such as Metcash (MTS) and Telstra (TLS); high-quality growth names such as CSL (CSL); and portfolio insurance provided by gold miners such as Evolution (EVN).

Performance in November was driven by a different part of the portfolio – cyclical, recovery-linked exposures such as Qantas (QAN), Santos (STO) and Monadelphous (MND).

At times this year the growth exposure has worked well – for example CSL and Xero (XRO). At other times it was the policy beneficiaries such as Fortescue Mining (FMG), JB Hi-Fi (JBH) and Atlas Arteria (ALX).

We did well as the market recognised the value offered in long-term winners such as Aristocrat (ALL), James Hardie (JHX) and Nine Entertainment (NEC).

The recent strong run may mean we are in for a period of consolidation, though not necessarily any sort of material pull-back.

The risk of prolonged recession has receded. Policy-makers remain in the mindset of “whatever it takes” with policy settings supporting the economy and markets.

The world is in a better place than many feared in March. The economic rebound has been strong, helped by a surge in monetary and fiscal policy support. Strong industrial production in the US is helping offset weaker activity in services. Vaccines are on the horizon. The world is getting better at living with the virus and mitigating its economic damage.

Nevertheless, risks remain. The northern hemisphere Covid surge has led to renewed lockdowns and an impact on real-time economic activity. There is a great deal of complexity around the vaccines. How soon and how widespread will they be deployed? How quickly will we return to normal? Geopolitical risk – particularly in the relationship between China and Australia – is higher than usual.

The upshot is that we believe our balanced approach remains as valid now as it did earlier in the year.

New stocks added and/or stocks sold to zero during the month

Sell to zero in Coles (COL)

The portfolio has adjusted its positions in the more defensive part of the portfolio, selling out of a position in supermarket retailer Coles (COL).

COL’s defensive earnings stream has helped provide portfolio protection against the risk of prolonged recession or further material market downturn. The position has served its purpose, helping the portfolio perform through periods of market stress and making a positive contribution to relative performance.

However recent data suggests COL is losing momentum on sales, particularly relative to its key competitor Woolworth (WOW). With no clear catalyst for a reversal in this trend, we see increased fundamental risks and are closing the position.

We retain exposure to the supermarket sector via a position in Metcash and its IGA franchise. This provides exposure to a defensive earnings stream, coupled with company-specific factors such as improvements in market share on the back of improved store formats and an increase in neighbourhood-style convenience shopping.
